Back to the home of the Entity and its origin.See and experience the entity's first encounter with its mate and vice versa. Walkthrough for my map/story of my Escape Room game entitled to trust an incubus is an unusual tale that follows the aftermath of some experimentation that was done to the player by an uncaring doctor that seemed to focus more on his own personal gratification than the care for the player that had become a part of his routine.During his usual snooze in his first class seat on a late night flight to Mexico, an alien creature attaches itself to his abdomen. Soon a change starts to happen, and the creature is strangely aware of his surroundings and he begins to use his teleportation skills to move about the plane and the passengers. This should be the simple part of the story, yet the ensuing events are complex enough to have any normal human decide that he is insane or the meds he has been taking must be working. So there you go. You get the message. Perhaps the game itself will give you a better message as it unfolds through the trials of a hopelessly smitten alien. Good luck to you on the great adventure. Mafia Life: Vice City Good luck. Vegas: Lost In Time 2 Fellow traveler. Lost Hearts 2: A True Ghost Story Welcome back from the dead, you lucky bastard. Or...maybe it's better to be honest, if it's not too much. Crash Bandicoot: N. Sane Trilogy It's been a long time since Crash Bandicoot. But finally he's back. What's new in The Entity: Returning Home:

I've started researching the hosting for Chapter 2 and it seems like the easiest, most cost effective (and probably most unknown) solution is via RaptorHost. Though there is a 5 year minimum, and only 50 GB HDD space per account at the moment. I'm more concerned with the price than the amount of space. This will be a XenMotion server, so I'm hoping that the 5 year minimum will factor in some kind of premimum for new customers. So here's the deal: Why should I chose this, generally? Why not some other hosting company like RackSpace (or, more likely, Lavabit) or infowarfare?com? You have a fairly unique model in a sense in that you host your own content and provide marketing and capitalization services as well as software, so you want a hosting service that's built to handle your specific needs. That doesn't necessarily give you some kind of big advantage, but it does mean that you should probably find a hosting company that has a relatively tailored set of services. Most providers tend to focus on one of the following three areas: Scalability, Support, or Pricing. Of course, the providers I've listed focus all three, but... That being said, nearly every provider can provide scalability and support needs you'll have if you have hundreds of thousands of page views a month. You need to be prepared to support your clientele, but most providers have a support option you can take advantage of. Don't forget that Scalability and Support are two sides of the same coin, in that Reliability is not necessarily something that your provider is going to be able to ensure. Pricing is an odd one, because some providers may be offering a low-cost plan that's not transparently tied to an specific order. You know, offerings that are supposed to be "Zero Upfront". You could point to this as a benefit, or a downside... make sure you know the fine print. On the other hand, some providers make pricing transparent and at least advertise the same costs for multiple plans, or even offering discounts when you buy more. Again, this might be seen as a downside, but remember that you may want to choose a provider that's more transparent than others, as business and/or organization helps keep prices down... So... what are you getting? While RaptorHost is going to offer quite a few different levels, the most practical option is their cloud. They
